THE RIGHT MAN IN THE RIGHT PLACE,

Socrates, speaking of pulic men and matters affecting the public welfare of nations, said, and with considerable truth, that "the happiest mortals were those whose own affairs kept them fully occupied, and who could get through life without being called upon to intermeddle in affairs of state, but that those only who took upon themselves the burden of legislation or some other public work, deserved well of their fellow-creatures." We are not prepared to go quite so far as the Grecian philosopher, for in these modern times it seems to be not impossible for men, who would not come within the above category, to be worthy of the esteem and praise of their neighbors. In colonies, however, it must be acknowledged that those who voluntarily take a part in building up the general prosperity of their country and lend their aid to frame laws for the maintenance of order and the preservation of good government in the land, are the men whose names in future history will be connected with the colony in which they live, and according to their acts will they receive the meed of praise or censure. Different motives influence those who are induced to leave the comforts of private life to take a part in the active strife and turmoil of politics. Some seek, alone, the good of their fellow-citizens, and sacrifice their own leisure and ease with the sole aim of assisting to establish and promote commercial prosperity of their country, influenced by the voice of their friends, who, sensible of the qualities which have proved successful in private business, invite them to take part in public affairs. Some of the best men in all ages have entered into political life without, at the outset, any ambition beyond that of doing good. Others there are who, in whatever station their lot may be cast, are never free from the promptings of ambition to distinguish themselves, and whatever they are called upon to do, must be done in the front ranks. Such men usually make good soldiers, but are not always able tacticians, and their success in politics will mainly depend upon the course which they adopt at the outset of their public career. Few men who have taken up politics to satisfy the cravings of ambition, can take an un-biassed view of public affairs. A party spirit is infused into all their actions, which influences their whole life, and it mainly depends upon the party to which they attach themselves, whether or not the course of their public life shall be beneficial to the country. Some few there are who enter into public life as an adjunct to their private business, and with a view to their own aggrandisement. It is not a necessary consequence that these "adventurers in political science" should make bad law-givers. The identity of their own interests with those of the country in which they live, will in general keep them from going very far from wrong; but their views are frequuently cramped and confined. The public weal, if not in their own opinion, subservient to their own private in terest, is so intimately connected with it, that they will not readily acknowledge the soundness of any political views which seem to their narrow imagination to militate against their own individual interests. In all young coies, those who are conin its prosperity, to make the public as much consequence, to land to those whose lives have been asso- ing Election. ciated with her public affairs since the commencement of their political career, are those who should be sought out by their fellow-citizens to watch over their interests in the affairs of State, and in legislating for the good government of the country. Men who have some stake in the country and some property, which identifies them with the land on which they are resident, are the proper persons to undertake the direction of public affairs. Great orators do not always make great statesmen, and in colonial parliaments practical men of business, who can express their views clearly and unhesitatingly, are of more use in carrying on the business of the country than men of brilliant talent. We require in our legislators much plodding industry and a quick perception of ideas, rather than ambitious political views. At present, with only a small number of public men proportionate to our population, we are happily not divided into any great sectional divisions of parties. There can be no doubt that those who represent the people in the House of Assembly are all guided by the endeavor to do that which, in their idea, is the best for the public good. It is, nevertheless, very important that the public should take care that, so far as it is possible for them to arrange it, the best men shall make their laws. We have three gentlemen at present be fore us, let the electors of Victoria study well LODGING HOUSE, their addresses, and their antecedents; two ef them are tried public servants, judging them by the popular standard we will not presume to say that either of them deserve otherwise than well of their fellow-citizens. In the present House of Assembly the presence of a Liberal member of decided and known opinions, and who boldly expresses his views is much to be desired—no vacillation del7 Im MRS. ALEXANDER. In the present House of Assembly the preson main questions can be tolerated. The Liberal party have a good candidate before them, and we doubt not that the electors will show him their appreciation of his views, and of his conduct as a member of the first municipal Council when the polling day arrives. CENTLEMEN,—In accordance with a pledge a given by me at the last general election, I again present myself before you as a Candidate for your suffrages. On the last occasion I withdrew from the field contrary to the wishes of many of the electors; but from the carnest desire to benefit the liberal party whose principles I profess. My views as then placed before you, remain unstered. I was then and still remain a staunch advocate of all liberal measures, and a stremuous opponent of all Government and other jobbery. I have settled in this Colony with my family with the intextion of making it my future home. I have invested largely and am consequently largely independant of either party or seet, and should you honor me by returning me as one of your mombers, my endeavors will be directed to the obtaining of a more equal and just system of taxation, to the defence of the freedom of the Port of Victoria in all is integrity, to the establishment (on just terms) of Direct Mail Communication with the Mother Country, to the opening up of Roads throughout the Island, and to the due encouragement of all enterprises calculated to develop its Mineral and other resources. As I have had the honor before of representing you for three years, and as I then endeavored to perform my duties faithfully, for which I unhesitatingly refer to the records of the House and not to the reports of the day, I will simply state if now elected by you I shall endeavor again to do my duty.

You and all of us are deeply interested in the prosperity of our colony; my legislative efforts shall be carnestly directed to its promotion in every possible manner.

I shall support the enactment of liberal Mining Laws in order to encourage the working of our Mines and the active employment of labor.

I shall support a new Act of Incorporation for the City of Victoria and uphold the Mayor and Council and those acting under them in their official proceedings.

REV. LACHLIN TAYLOR .- This worthy and esteemed gentleman having accomplished the great work for which he visited these shores by establishing branches of the British and Foreign Bible Society in this and the sister colony, is now about to take his departure. Some of the reverend gentleman's warmest friends and admirers have proposed to invite him to a breakfast, and the subject was on Saturday evening mosted at a special meet ing of the committee held at Messrs. He spoke in the most feeling terms of the good fellowship and personal kindliness which had been manifested towards him by his brother ministers and the laity of both his brother ministers and the laity of both his visit to Vancouver Island and British Columbia, not forgetting rugged Cariboo, which was not without its attractions. In taking an affectionate farewell, he should feel equally grateful to his friends if the proposed demonstration did not take place, and he advanced several reasons why he wished the committee to let the proposition slumber.

After some discussion the committee decided upon shewing a deference to the expressed wish of the reverend gentleman. It certainly does strike us that there are other and more appropriate ways which the friends of Mr. Taylor might adopt for marking their esteem of the worthy gentleman, and ways in which lately portion of the community might be enabled, as we are sure they gladly would, his entire that the commission of the community might be enabled, as we are sure they gladly would. down close to the face of the rocks and open The thanks of all lovers of fruits are due to that excellent connoisseur, Mr. Pritchard, for These changes should be avoided if possible, ask they occasion feelings of discontent among the patrons of the theatre. We heard several expressions of disapprobation from parties who had engaged seats purposely to witness the performance of "His Last Legs."

THE ALIEN QUESTION.—It is a noticeable fact that the three gentlemen who have solicited the suffrages of the voters at the compile election, have carefully abstained in their addresses from any allusion to the alien question. Why, may we enquire, this reticence on a subject of such importance, and which will so materially affect the position of the candidates at the poil? We regard this as a test question which will, in great measure, govern the election, and it would have saved much trouble and exhibited a greater degree of ingenuousness, had the aspirants to legislative honors, while expounding their views on some of the leading questions of the day, stated fairly and candidly their convictions on this head in stead of allowing doubts to arise and their opinions to be publicly challenged. We know nothing of the sentiments entertained that he is undoubtedly in favor of the principle of all aliens after a certain term of residence being admitted, upon taking the other two gentlemen, but of Mr. Scarby we believe we are warranted in stating that he is undoubtedly in favor of the principle of all aliens after a certain term of residence being admitted, upon taking the other two gentlemen, but of Mr. Scarby we believe we are warranted in stating that he is undoubtedly in favor of the principle of all aliens after a certain term of residence being admitted, upon taking the other two gentlemes, but of the principle of all aliens after a certain term of residence being admitted, upon taking the other two gentlemes, but of the period of residence which should quality for general experiment—that makes $10,000; and I is should think that would bail and each individual contributes one dollarprinciple of all aliens after a certain term of residence being admitted, upon taking the cath of allegiance, to equal rights and privileges with British born subjects. Of the period of residence which should quality foreign residents, we must leave Mr. Searby himself to speak.

The Candidates—The friends of the three candidates are busily canvassing the city, and there is every appearance of a warmly-contested election. We would remind the supporters of Mr. Searby that there is danger in being too sanguine of the return of their candidate. Many a battle has been lost from too much self-relance and underestimating the strength of the opposing force. Let them be up and string; with a large and influential committee and good working subcommittees, the return of the man of their candidate. The Courantee—The friends of the three conditions are many and the string of the breath of the madam beating upon his face. Another moment and he was free! his foe was shaking upon the floor, shricking with hysterical laughter, holding in his hand the dense, black, ourl-clustered wig of the Frenchman. He was off instantly, staggering to the door, passing a shivering haddle of people on the laiding who had been afraid to enter the room, although roused by the noise of the struggle—half flinging himself down the stairs, hurrying out into the street. Pale, livid, trembling, panting for breath, his clothes torn and twisted, and his head bare, how old he looked now! how more than ever skull-like his face! how old he looked now! how more than ever skull-like his face!

There was not a hair to be seen upon that yellow shining crown, terribly red and bruised and battered in places where it hal come in centract with the floor and the table.

He fell down more than once, to stagger up again more stunned and shaken, and hurry on. At last, feeling his limbs give way under him, he staggered into a cab, but he could not speak. In vain the driver sought to question him as to the direction in which he would be driven; he could give no answer; could only wave one hand in a scared, half-mad way, which seemed to urge nothing so much as immediate movement. The cabman drove off at length, at a rapid page, it the direction of the Middlesex side of the river. Monsieur Auatole need not to have river. Monsieur Anatole need not to have been in such dire apprehension. In the street he had quitted a crowd now stood round an object in the gutter; a helf-naked creature, bleeding, shattered, muddy, lifeless. With a madman's sagaoity and cleverness, the captain had discovered the quickest way of reaching his runaway loe. He had heard the Frenchman's footstens in the street, and
